

On December 8, 1917, Detective William Wolsey was standing on the 3rd Street viaduct talking to a citizen when Frank Warren and Chub Hardin attempted to rob them. Although Warren had stuck a pistol in Detective Wolsey's abdomen, the detective still went for his gun and squeezed the trigger before Warren realized what was happening. Unfortunately, the detective's gun did not fire so the detective pulled the trigger a second time. So did Warren. Both guns fired and both men fell to the ground and died. Chub Hardin was captured later, but because he was a juvenile, he received no harsh punishment.